cases there was no guard on the side or rear door.

In other cases, however, several saloons remained closed until after noon. In the Tenderloin and Haclem unusual care was taken to admit only those known to the bartender or guard.

But in no case did any of the saloon-keepers obey that section of the breweries' instruction regarding remaining out of the barroom. Not one saloon could be found where the back room bar was resorted to. The only precaution taken was the substitution of a dark cont for the white coat and apron of the bartender.
